It's Christmas time in Roxboro Beach, Virginia, and the small town is in its usual uproar. Heather Rorke couldn't be happier. Plenty of houses in need of a 'spring' cleaning before friends and relatives arrive, and she's in her element as the town's only organic cleaning company.

When former friend Heathcliff Quinton shows up in town, her mundane life is turned upside down when he's suddenly accused of murdering town charmer, Walter King. Heather doesn't believe it. Her former school friend couldn't possibly be guilty, and she's determined to prove his innocence. Little does she know he's more adept at doing that than she is.

Together these two friends enter into an agreement to solve the crime and keep Heathcliff out of jail before Christmas bells ring and the town's time of giving gets into full swing.

They're on the trail of a Christmas mystery no one expects, and when unseemly truths about the mild-mannered victim come to light and startling revelations of the residents of the sleepy town, it's clear to see that not everything's the way it seems in the town where everyone knows your name.
