Everyone knows that dogs are the best life partners, and often they make great therapists and life coaches too. When Oscar's Mom goes through a mid-life crisis and quits her job, she and Oscar set out on an extended road trip, searching for the answers to life's deepest questions. Once unleashed, Oscar describes hiking and running through the landscapes of the American west in the dynamic anthropomorphic language of a dog who sees himself as one with the world around him. Their misadventures on the road and in the back country spark conversations about work, relationships, responsibility, happiness and love, as well as the thornier issues of anxiety, addiction, homelessness and racism. Told from Oscar's point of view, with an outsider's skepticism, an anthropologist's curiosity, and a smart alleck's sophomoric pedantry, his travelogue is insightful, often funny and occasionally poignant. Narrated with the gusto and curiosity of a dog experiencing the world for the first time, Oscar's heart-warming adventures and empathy for the human condition will be delight dogs and their humans alike.
