

The First Annual Of The Society Of Illustrators 1911

In the year 1911, something extraordinary happened that would forever change the world of illustration. The Society of Illustrators, a prestigious organization aiming to promote and celebrate the art of illustration, held its very first Annual Exhibition. This revolutionary event brought together talented artists from various disciplines and showcased their captivating works to the world. In this article, we delve into the historical significance of The First Annual Of The Society Of Illustrators 1911, exploring the incredible talent on display, the impact it had on the industry, and its enduring legacy.

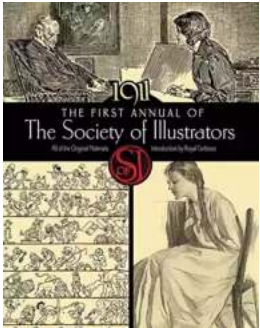

The Birth of The Society of Illustrators

Prior to the creation of The Society of Illustrators, there was no dedicated platform to recognize and honor illustrators. In 1901, a group of prominent artists, notably Henry Hutt, Albert Sterner, Charles Dana Gibson, and Howard Pyle, decided to establish an organization that would fill this void. Their vision was to bring together the best illustrators of the time and provide opportunities for artistic growth, education, and collaboration.

Over the next decade, The Society of Illustrators grew rapidly, attracting hundreds of talented artists and offering a range of events, workshops, and exhibitions. However, it wasn't until 1911 that the organization truly made a grand entrance onto the world stage. The First Annual Exhibition would become a pivotal moment in the history of illustration, establishing The Society of Illustrators as a leading authority in the field.

A New York City–based institution founded in 1901, the Society of Illustrators remains dedicated to promoting the art of illustration. Ten years after its 1901 founding, the organization resolved to publish an annual compilation of the year's best illustrations by its members. The custom endures to the present day, and the Illustrators Annual remains among the most prestigious publications in its field. This, the first of the organization's annuals, features 85 images by several of the most influential illustrators of the twentieth century, including Frederic Remington, James Montgomery Flagg, Franklin Booth, Charles Dana Gibson, and many others. This new edition reprints the original publication's by Royal Cortissoz, a highly regarded art critic of the day. Past Society president Dennis Dittrich provides a Foreword, setting the work in context for today's readers and modern-day students of illustration.
