This family story and life history relates Bob's childhood activities during the 1930s, military service, higher education, noted career highway engineering and environmental answers and concludes with his continuing active life.

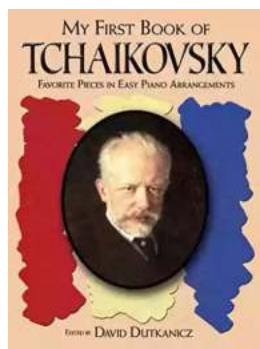

Bob is a humble person, from a poor family during the Great Depression, who outspelled all of his classmates during grade and high school. He is a devoted family man, spending fruitful time with his family. They love and admire him very much. He knows that teamwork with his family, in his social encounters, and with his work associates is essential. In his highway work, Bob found that an interdisciplinary involvement is essential to fully identify problems, making it possible to get acceptable answers.

He adjusted well from a primitive background to an action filled career: four years in the United States Air Force; engineering graduate from the University of Nebraska; four years as a highway design engineer with The Missouri Highway Commission; six years with The Federal Highway Administration involved in design and construction of interstate and primary highways in Ohio and Nebraska; then, during five years in the headquarters office, became an expert in coordinating and writing regulations to comply with environmental statutes signed by President Nixon in 1969. Bob received wide recognition and was awarded for his many achievements. He was selected for the lead role of writing and coordinating an Action Plan on Federal Lands Highways to satisfy the requirements of Federal Legislation. After his thirty year engineering and environmental career, Bob teamed up with The Federal Emergency Management Agency in assessing damages and needed repairs of highways impacted by tornadoes.
