The journey began with a visit to the Maasai Mara National Reserve, where they witnessed an awe-inspiring display of wildlife in its natural habitat. From majestic lions roaming freely to herds of elephants gracefully traversing the savannah, the teenagers were captivated by the beauty and rawness of nature.

Immersing themselves in the local culture, they stayed in traditional Maasai homestays, learning about the ancient traditions and customs of the Maasai tribe. They even had the opportunity to participate in a traditional ceremonial dance, wearing Maasai attire and fully embracing the vibrant rhythms of East Africa.

A Different World: The Slums of Nairobi

With their privileged backgrounds, visiting the slums of Nairobi was a stark contrast to the lives these teenagers had known. Their hearts were struck by the harsh reality faced by many Kenyans living in poverty and limited access to basic necessities.

Partnering with a local NGO, the teenagers engaged in community development projects aimed at improving the lives of slum dwellers. From constructing water wells to providing educational resources, they worked tirelessly alongside the locals to bring about positive change.

The experience was both humbling and eye-opening. It shattered their preconceived notions and made them realize the value of compassion and empathy for those less fortunate.

Exploring the Exquisite Coastline

Leaving the bustling city behind, the group ventured to the stunning coastal region of Kenya. With its pristine white sandy beaches and crystal-clear turquoise waters, they couldn't help but be mesmerized by the beauty that surrounded them.

They discovered the vibrant coastal town of Mombasa, immersing themselves in its rich Swahili culture and historical landmarks such as the iconic Fort Jesus. They indulged in local delicacies, experiencing the explosion of flavors that thrilled their taste buds.

The teenagers also had the opportunity to go on a thrilling safari at Tsavo East National Park. They spotted a variety of wildlife, including iconic elephants, graceful giraffes, and elusive leopards. The safari instilled in them a deep appreciation for Kenya's commitment to wildlife conservation.

A Journey of Self-Discovery

Through the challenges, awe-inspiring sights, and encounters with incredible people, this journey became a catalyst for self-discovery and personal growth for each teenager.

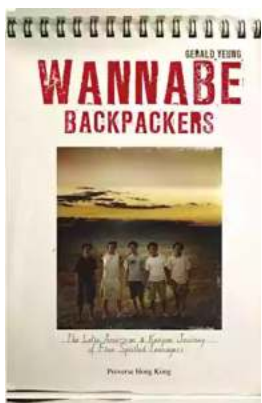

They realized the importance of gratitude, compassion, and embracing the beauty of diversity. They learned to appreciate the little things in life and developed a newfound sense of purpose – to contribute positively to the world they live in.

Upon returning home, these once spoiled teenagers embarked on a mission to create change in their own communities. They started various initiatives, from fundraising to support local charities to organizing cultural exchange programs to foster understanding and acceptance among different cultures.

The Latin American Kenyan journey of these five spoiled teenagers turned out to be a transformative experience that challenged their perspectives and reshaped their lives. From witnessing the awe-inspiring wildlife to immersing themselves in Maasai traditions and engaging in community development projects, they learned invaluable lessons that will stay with them for a lifetime.

This journey taught them that true fulfillment comes not from material possessions, but from meaningful connections, experiences, and making a positive impact on the world around them. It serves as a reminder to all of us that stepping out of our comfort zones can lead to incredible growth and create opportunities to make a difference.

The Summer of their twentieth birthdays, five self-confessed “spoiled Hong Kong boys” and their designer suitcases travelled to Latin America and Kenya. Out to prove they were tougher than they looked but not actually ready to rough it too much, Justin the pretty boy, Lulu the shopaholic, DJ the womaniser (or so he thought), Brian the modern Romeo, and Gerald the group mom hopped from city to city, alternating between a five-star hotel in Argentina and rustic hostels in Kenya. In a month-long journey where their friendship and mental fortitude were put to the test, they had one objective in mind—coming home as backpackers. Told with candour and an endearing naivety, Wannabe Backpackers is a story about friendship and coming-of-age.

"A Hong Kong story of roughing it the nice way. The story is about the interaction among the five during their 30 days on the road together. 'Some things we found out about each other, we really didn't want to know.'" — Annemarie Evans, SCMP

"Written in diary style, the book conveys the precarious state of a young man poised between a protected childhood and imminent independence as an adult, providing fabulous insight for parents into what's really going on in a teen's mind. Encounters with girls, 'weird' food and clubbing in a foreign language are balanced with budding understanding of the differences of other cultures and appreciation of their beauty. Each of the friends adds their own epilogue summing up the group's collective experience." — Parents' Journal, HK

"When traveling to a foreign land, it is difficult to overcome one's preconceptions and see what the natives see. Similarly, when writing a first book it is difficult to get past one's preconceptions and be truly honest. Gerald Yeung, in a brilliant first effort, experiences the former and completely overcomes the latter, with hilarious results. If you have ever traveled far from home and experienced that strange mix of wonder and frustration, this book is for you. Buy it and become friends with 5 traveling companions you'll never forget." — A. H. Munter, Philadelphia, PA, USA, Amazon.com
