‘Wwoofing eh?’ was the reaction Jake received from most Canadians while he was over there for four months. From everyone else – before and after the trip – he received confused silence or comments about how a dog communicates. However, it is simply a way in which a cash strapped person can travel in a foreign country for a length of time, and “contribute” to a farm, in which they will work 4-6 hours a day and 4-5 days a week. In return the wwoofer will be given food, a bed and possibly be shown around the local area.

Jake’s plan is simple; to spend four months wwoofing his way across Canada, from Toronto to Vancouver (missing out Quebec, because, well, he couldn’t be bothered to learn French).

As well as his aforementioned poorness, Jake has many reasons why he wants to wwoof, such as learning how to farm and to understand a different way of life. To his dismay, his first wwoofing experience is not what he was quite hoping for: on a farm in eastern Ontario with a volatile woman and her dozen cats, Jake realises the two weeks he has planned to stay at the farm are too long to seriously contemplate.

Jake travels for over two months across Canada, before meeting up with his mum, who has been travelling around the world for five months.

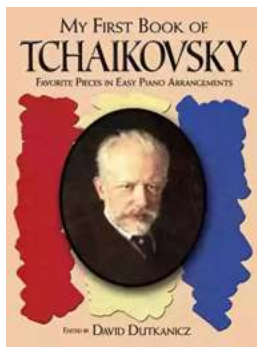

Jake finds himself working through sixteen feet of snow and in the scorching temperatures of the Canadian desert. He sleeps on a school bus, begins eating plants and experiences life as he never has before.

So...woofing...nothing to do with dogs.
